SEPTEMBER 2021 | BROOKLYN  RENTAL MARKET

September 2021: Brooklyn Inventory and Leasing Activity Fell to a 15-Month Low While Prices Trended Upward Reduction in supply and a twelve-month high median rent figure forced leasing activity to slow relative to both last month and last year. In 2019, the decline in number of leases versus August was $-16 \%$, but at that time inventory had only fallen on a month-over-month basis by $-18 \%$ while median rent remained flat. This September, monthly inventory dropped more dramatically while prices escalated versus August.

Lease activity fell year-over-year for the second consecutive month. As concessions and discounts disappeared during the late spring and early summer, renters rushed to signed leases, likely "borrowing" from September activity and exaggerating the annual decline.

| One Bedrooms | 445 | $-38 \%$ | YoY |
| Two Bedrooms | 384 | $-34 \%$ | YoY |
| Three Bedrooms | 151 | $-26 \%$ | YoY |

All unit types experienced year-over-year declines in leasing activity, with only slight variations in amounts. Softening rents for three berooms enabled its leasing activity to fall the least. The studio market also weakened less drastically compared to one and two bedrooms, only because the annual gain during September of last year was more muted.

| Two Bedrooms | $$ 3,575$ |  | $0 \%$ |
| Three Bedrooms | $$ 3,849$ |  | $-12 \%$ |

Average rent for studios increased $12 \%$ relative to last year when rents were falling faster than other unit types. Average rent for one and two bedrooms increased by a slight 1\%, and for one bedrooms it $$ 2,500$ was the first increase in fourteen months. Average rent for three bedrooms fell $12 \%$ annually, reaching a nine-month low. Last year several leases were signed in condos with waterfront views.

Days on market for smaller units dropped relative to last year when value-oriented renters took their time looking around for deals. Studios spent just 40 days on the market on average, the lowest in twenty months. Three bedrooms lingered on the market the longest of all unit types, only the second time this occurred in the 20 past year.

SEPTEMBER 2021 | BROOKLYN | RENTAL MARKET

September 2021: Leasing activity fell annually in all neighborhoods except for South Brooklyn, which had below average activity a year ago. Other value-oriented neighborhoods saw only single-digit declines in lease activity. Changes in rents versus a year ago were mixed, though average rent surged in Downtown Brooklyn compared to September 2020 when high vacancy rates were still evident in many rental properties.
